The woman is on the right, wearing a grey blazer and white shorts, holding the man's hand. The background shows the ocean and a bright sunset sky. The overall mood is peaceful and romantic.

How would the sudden onset of a serious illness impact my financial wellbeing?

If you were suddenly affected by a serious illness like cancer or a stroke, this would have a significant bearing on your ability to maintain your lifestyle and provide for your dependants.

Serious illness may affect your ability to work at all or you may have to reduce your work hours significantly, leading to a substantial drop in income. This drop in income could in turn impact on your ability to continue meeting your day to day expenses and overheads, such as mortgage and other loan repayments.

If you are an employee and pay PRSI, the social welfare Illness Benefit or Invalidity Pension may replace part of this lost income. However, the benefits are low and if you are self-employed you are not covered for these benefits at all.

A serious illness policy could offer you financial stability if you were to experience a sharp drop in income due to a serious illness.

What is serious illness cover?

Serious illness cover pays you a tax-free lump sum if you are diagnosed with a specific illness covered by your policy. This lump sum can be used to pay living expenses, your mortgage, short-term debt and your medical expenses, if necessary. On the diagnosis of certain illnesses covered in your policy the full capital sum insured is payable and for other, less serious illnesses, part of the capital sum is payable.

Serious illness cover can also be called 'critical illness cover' and 'specified illness cover'. Though it is often sold as an optional extra on a life insurance or mortgage protection policy, it can also be sold as an insurance policy on its own.

Every insurance company is different and will cover different illnesses. The precise definitions of each illness that qualifies for a payout will also likely differ, as will decisions on whether the full or partial sum insured is payable on a confirmed medical diagnosis of that illness.

Surgery Benefit: Some serious illness policies pay out a certain amount if you are diagnosed as requiring certain serious surgery such as coronary artery bypass, graft or heart-valve replacement or repair surgery. This immediate payment can help you to get immediate medical care and give you more options about when and where to have the surgery carried out.

Children's Cover: Some serious illness policies also cover your children for a limited amount, such as €15,000, should they be unfortunate enough to suffer from certain serious illness covered by the policy.

Restricted Cover: Currently on the market there is the option of cancer-only cover, which may be suitable for you for a number of reasons: the specified cover is what you are looking for and you are not interested in protection against other illnesses; the cost will generally be cheaper than more comprehensive cover; and you may have a pre-existing medical condition which means you cannot get comprehensive cover but the specialised cover may still be open to you.

Because of the many differences between policies from various insurance companies, serious illness cover can be a confusing product to understand. Your PSC Financial Planning partner will explain it in easy-to-understand language and will outline the nature of the cover and what benefits are payable under different circumstances.

What's the difference between income protection and serious illness cover?

Income protection cover can protect part of your earned income if you are off work due to illness or disability for a prolonged period. However, it may not fully financially protect you for a number of reasons:

- Unlike serious illness cover, income protection pays a regular taxable income, not a tax-free lump sum. This regular income is only payable as long as you are considered unfit to work. You may need access to a capital sum to deal with the financial consequences of a sudden serious illness.
- You have to be off work sick for a prolonged period, such as three or six months, before income protection cover starts to pay out.
- You can only get income protection cover if you're working and earning an income.
- Income protection cover will only insure part of your lost earned income (typically it is limited to three quarters of your annual income).
- You may not be able to get income protection cover if you work in certain occupations.
- You could suffer certain illness such as a heart attack or have to undergo a heart by-pass operation, which can give rise to significant medical expenses and other outlays, but which may not leave you out of work sick long enough to claim income protection cover.

How much will serious illness cover cost me?

The monthly cost of a serious illness policy will depend on a number of factors:

- How old you are when you take out the cover
- How long you want the cover, i.e. the term of the policy
- The level of cover you want, and whether you want this cover to increase annually
- Your general health
- Whether you smoke or not; smokers will be charged more than non smokers for the same cover
- Whether you want the serious illness cover on its own or added to a life insurance policy
- For example a male age 35 years, non-smoker, serious illness benefit of €50,000 for a 20 year term and including the option to continue the cover beyond 20 years without medical underwriting costs €19.24 per month. In this example €19.24 per month is the cheapest on the market versus the most expensive of €27.44 pm. That's a saving of almost €100 per annum or €2,000 over the life of the policy.

Your PSC Financial Planning partner will be able to shop around for you for the best serious illness cover based on your needs and financial circumstances.

Can I add serious illness cover to my life insurance cover?

You can take out serious illness cover on its own or as an addition to life insurance cover. For example, you can arrange for your life insurance cover to be paid early if you are diagnosed as suffering from any of the illnesses covered by the policy. In this case, the cover is paid once only, either on serious illness or on death. Alternatively you could arrange the serious illness cover to be paid in addition to your life assurance cover. This latter option is more expensive.

Talk to your PSC Financial Planning partner about the option of adding serious illness cover to your life insurance policy. We will be able to advise you on whether it is the best approach for you.
